A JAPANESE CONTROVERSY.

Dr. Macgowan Taken to Task by a Japa-nese Writer.

The Pall Mall Gaselle sums up some interesting information about the Japanese:

"An amusing controversy has arisen in the Far East in regard to the moral and physical condition of the people of Japan. It may be remembered that when that country was first reopened to foreigners a few years ago, the ac-counts given of the habits and customs which there prevail, pointed rather to pleasure as the there prevail, pointed rather to pleasure as the end pursued than to moral law as the guide end pursued than to moral law as the guide obeyed. In particular, Europeans were struck with the arrangements of the 'tea-houses.' Sir Butherford Alcock on his journeys in the interior was either so profoundly impressed with the impropriety of this system, or else was so fearful of the temptations to which it might expose him, that he rejused to put up at these establishments, though they are the only hotels too travellers of all descriptions, and required for travellers of all descriptions, and required the Government to provide him with separate accommodation. Judged by European Ideas, the freedom of manners which prevails in Japan naturally leads to conclusions unfavorable to the morality of the people, and disposes one to believe the statements which are made as to their physical deterioration. This is the subject on which controversy has arisen in Shanghae, the Chinese port nearest to Japan.

"The discussion was originated by Dr. Mac-gowan, an American who was once a missionary at Ningpo, but is now engaged in the secular work of Commissioner for the East India Telegraph Company. He lately read a statistical paper before the Asiatic Society at Shanghae, in which he averred that 'unrestrained licentiousness and a universal taint' existed among the Japanese, and that these two causes are both decreasing the numbers and deteriorating the decreasing the numbers and deteriorating the quality of their population. So rapidly, however, has the press advanced in these parts of the world of late years, that this statement, being inserted in the Chinese version of a Shanghae paper, was immediately replied to by a native Japanese, who wrote in the old Chinese character, which is understood both in Japan and by the better educated in China. It is worthy of notice that the chivalrans sons of worthy of notice that the chivalrous sons of Niphon are beginning to exchange their long swords for the pen as a means of controversy, and it is not to be wondered at that even the latter instrument should still, in their hands, have a martial flourish about it. Dr. Macgowan's opponent writes very contemptuously of the Doctor's knowledge of Japan, and states that, if the accusations were known in Japan, the youth of that country would, without ex-ception, rush to arms in order to avenge the

"Unfortunately, neither of the two controver-sialists gives sufficient grounds for his conclustons. Dr. Macgowan simply asserts that the population of the country has been greatly overestimated; that he thinks it is not more than sixteen millions (a ridiculous under-estimate), and that it has formerly been much greater, and is still decreasing; after which he assigns licentiousness as the guilty cause. The Japanese, on the other hand, asserts that the population of his country is nearer fifty than sixteen millions, and is quite as large as it ought to be. There may be some truth in Dr. Macgo wan's statement, but it is almost universally allowed by travellers that the Japanese men generally are strong and active, while the women are healthy and goodlooking. These characteristics are hardly reconcliable with Dr. Macgowan's averment, and in the last few years the Japanese have shown remarkable energy and practical talent in adopt ing and using Western inventions. "We have a list of eighty European and American vessels, almost all steamers, which have been purchased by the Japanese Government and by individual daim'os since 1859, when the ports were opened; and many of these steamers are entirely manned and officered by Japanese. The Prince of Satsuma alone pur-chased seventeen steamers for purposes of war and trade, and, not content with what has already been done in this way, the Government has ordered in Europe and America a number of monitors and other iron-clad vessels. The steamers already purchased have cost the Japanese rather more than seven millions and a half of Mexican dollars, or about £1,200,000 sterling. Instead of showing a decaying race, this would seem to indicate a revival of the maritime spirit for which the Japanese were formerly distinguished, and which, a few centuries ago, brought their vessels to the coasts of China and Malaya, and even into Indian seas and across the Pacific to the shores of Western America. They have also established at Nagasaki expensive machine shops expressly for the repair of their steamers, and Prince Satsuma in particular, who was so disposed to fight with us at one time, has taken great pains to develop the re-sources of his principality and of the Lew chew islands by the introduction of cotton mills, sugar mills, and other machinery. He has gone so far even as to cause a work on the Law of Storms' to be published for the use of his sea-going subjects."

The French Minister Rouher, The following is a portion of a long article in the Cincinnati Commercial, translated from a German journal:-It remains for us to describe the political pe-culiarities of M. Rouher, or rather the influence of his individual views on the Emperor's policy. And here we are obliged to contradict, in the most emphatic manner, the rumors circulated by the newspapers of all European countries, and likewise ecnoed by a majority of the Pari-sian journals, to wit: That Rouher often exerts a decisive influence on the political course pur-sued by the Emperor. We base our opinions on sources whose reliability can not be questioned; and may safely assert, therefore, that while Napoleon III holds the helm of government in France, no opinion but his own can have any influence on the destinles of France. Rouher, like all the other ministers, is nothing but an executor of the Imperial will; and as he is the only minister whose eloquence is such as to make an impression upon the Chambers, he occupies a more commanding position in the Cabinet than his colleagues. Moreover, it is a positive fact that the first draft of his celebrated speeches are always written by the Emperor himself. Rouher elaborates the draft as furnished to him by the Emperor reads, then the whole to his sovereign, corrects such passages as the latter points out to him, and it is only then that the speech is read to the Gabinet. Early in the morning, before the session of the Chamber at which the speech is to be delivered as opened, Rouher has another interview with the Emperor, and often important changes are made in the speech at the eleventh hour. Rouher's wonderful memory is perfectly equal to these extraordinary intel-

As an administrative officer, Rouher is a medicerity, and always anxiously observing the existing method, and never during to go beyond it. He is utterly unable to originate new measures of importance.

In fine, Rouher is such a man as Napoleon III needs; destitute of ambition and independence, but endowed with extraordinary talents, and, above all, possesses great parliamentary ability.

It was the Emperor's merit to have correctly appreciated these talents of M. Rouher among the vast number of parliamentary humbugs in France who keep on the side of the Government, and whose only genius consists in their boundless arrogance and vanity; and to have subjected him to his absolute and inflexible

Should Rouher ever show a disposition to play, in earnest, the part attrinuted to him by the enemies of the Emperor, the shove statement will be confirmed immediately. What has become of M. Achille Fould, who was formerly said to influence the imperial will in a decisive said to influence the imperial will in a decisive manner? What of Drouyn de Lhuys, the enemy of Prussia? What of Magne, the revolutionary financier?

All of them were, at length, tired of sacrificing their individual convictions to Napoleon's despotic will, and they became members of the eleepy Senate, where their memory is dying away very fast.

-During the late extra session of Congress Chief Justice Chase brought his personal in-fluence to bear upon members of both Houses, both directly and indirectly, against impeach-

The Approaching Execution of Bridget Dergan.

As the fatal day on which Bridget Dergan is pass into another world draws near she is gradually becoming more resigned to her fate, and evidently realizes that there is no chance of escape. During the latter part of last week she received a letter from her brothers, who reside, with her mother, at Sligo county, parish of Van Chief, Ireland, in which the death of her father is mentioned. Her brother, who is a well-to-do dry goods merchant, asks her in the letter if he can be of any service to her by crossing the ocean, and states that, if so, money will not deter him from doing so. The news of Bridget's situation had not, at the time the letter was mailed, been announced to her mother, as she was already afflicted by the death of her husband. At Bridget's dictation the jailor has written a reply to the letter, which will be forwarded by the Boston steamer to-morrow. She states to her friends that she will die in the states to her friends that she will die in the bosom of her holy religion, and a strict adhe-tent to the Roman Catholic faith. She asks that Fathers Kelly and White, in Ireland, be re-quested to say mass for the repose of her seul, and states that Father Rogers, of this city, has done all in his power to alleviate her bodily and mental sufferings.

Bridget tells her brothers and sisters, in her letter, that bad company has brought on her ruin. Since receiving the letter from her home, which is the first she has received for over a year, Bridget seems to be deeply affected, and states that in a day or two she will make a full confession of her knowledge of the crime for which she is under sentence of death. Father Rogers visits her about twice a week, and plainly tells her that she must make public the full particulars of the bloody occurrence. number of residents of the city, through a desire to satisfy their morbid curiosity, pay visits to the jail daily for the purpose of seeing the prisoner, but in many cases they are compelled to depart without having effected their object. Bridget has not made any new statements in regard to the murder, but still adheres to the statement recently made by her that the deed was committed with two knives, one of which Mrs. Coriel wrenched from the assassin's grasp .- N. Miss Burdett Coutts' Market for the Poor.

An English paper says:- "Miss Burdett Coutts has taken the initiative in an important enter-prise for the benefit of the poor in one of the most destitute districts of London. A local act, promoted in her name, was quietly passed through Parliament last session, the preamble of which sets forth that the opening of a market for the sale of fruits, vegetables, fish, meat, poultry, and other provisions, in a convenient position near Columbia square, Bethnal-green, would be of great advantage to large numbers of the laboring classes, and other persons resident in that parish and its neighborhood. And further it recites that Miss Burdett Coutts is willing to undertake the establishment of such a market at her own charge, and to maintain it for the use of the public. No time has been lost in giving effect to the authority contained in the act. A large piece of ground has been set spart for the market, and the buildings are already sufficiently advanced to enable one to judge of the aspect of the place when completed.

"The market is enclosed on each side by a range of Gothic buildings of an elegant but sub-stantial character. On the right and left is a row of shops, twelve on each side, with a covered way in front and dwelling-houses above. On the Lorth side of the market is the market hall, containing twenty-four shambles, the access to which is by a porch, above which rises a clock-tower one hundred and ten feet high. The shops are supplied with every convenience in the way of cellarage, water, gas, etc., and the dwellings above are each complete in itself, and contain comfortable rooms, with washbouse and kitchen, well ventilated and fitted with every sanitary requirement. The area of the market covers altogether ninety thousand feet. The large open square will be set apart for stalls and barrows of all kinds, the admission tees charged on dealers being at a very low scale, suitable to the costermonger class who conduct in so large a degree the commissariat of "This scheme will not only supplement the house accommodation of the adjoining Columbia Square, a large pile of model lodging-houses built a few years ago by Miss Coutts, and now tenanted by a numerous settlement of laborers and artisans, but will supply a want severely feit by the whole population of the neighborhood—the want of a convenient market. The project will also incidentally confer another benefit on this quarter by opening up a new street and otherwise improving the com-munications. Although utility has been the first object consulted in the plans of the market, and no effort has been spared to make the fittings of the shops as perfect as possible from a business point of view, Miss Coutts has been anxious that artistic effect should not be overlooked. The general appearance of the buildings, with the lotty clock-tower in the centre at the upper end, is very impressive. It is little to say that this market will be the best in any part of London. Compared not only with the spacious halles of Paris, but even with the markets in second and thirdrrate provincial towns in England, the metropolitan markets are one and all simply disgraceful—small, mean, overcrowded, and inconvenient in every way.'

Extreme Heat in India.

Intense heat has prevailed this summer in India. A local journal says:— "The past summer in India has not only been an unusually hot one, but it has been of un-usually long duration as well. Though Bombay may not have suffered anything so fierce as 'the branding summer of Bengal,' its proximity to the sea always insuring it a fresh breeze some time during the twenty-four hours, the heat even here has been intense for several months, the thermometer in the shade ranging to ninety degrees Fahrenheit, or more. As we write the thermometer indicates a temperature of eighty-six degrees, while the rainfall till last night only amounted to about two inches, the average fall at that date in former years being as much as ten times that quantity. The 'burst' of the moonsoon in Bombay this year consisted only of thunder and lightning, unaccompanied by the usual down-Several violent storms have, however, taken place in other localities on this side. On the Bengal side the heat has been so extreme as almost entirely to cause a suspension of business, and to render sleep and pleasure impos-sible. Merchants' offices and some public works have been opened only in the early morning and evening, and applications have been made by various courts of justice for permission to close their doors altogether till the weather should become endurable. Of course, as many as could escape to the hills did so, and to those who could not, the few showers we have already had and the propries of more at hard affect. had, and the promise of more at hand, afford some relief."
